JONNY BAKER,

photographer and author of the popular weblog on postmodern worship, art, and culture in the UK:

www.jonnybaker.blogs.com .

. He is the author of Alternative Worship and The Labyrinth: A transforming ritual, Creator and collector of “worship tricks,” worship coordinator for the “Greenbelt Arts Festival.” He is also the director of independent music and worship resource publisher Proost: www.proost.co.uk

Ed Phillips, PhD

Duke University Professor of the Practice of Christian Worship, whose interests are in the history of the practical and pastoral aspects of the church--how the church conducted worship, initiated Christians, and organized ministries--as a way to understand the development of Christian theology. Dr. Phillips chaired the United Methodist General Conference Holy Communion Study for the past three years. That study has produced the first comprehensive treatment of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper for the United Methodist Church: This Holy Mystery: the United Methodist Understanding of Holy Communion.

How and where does worship fit into the myriad of sensory experiences in contemporary culture? Is it pushed to the margins, or can it be re-envisioned to fit squarely in the center of our lives? How can we conduct worship in a way that is molded by and relevant to who we are, which may seem absent from our houses of worship. In short, how can we create "worship in a postmodern accent?"

Jonny Baker and Ed Phillips will help us live into and create out of these questions through workshops, spiritual formation practices, and conversations. This is a workshop when you will learn and generate ideas in "real time" through a hands-on creation of a worship experience amidst the night life of "Bricktown" in Oklahoma City. On Saturday, we'll process the experience of creating and engaging the worship space and how it informs our thinking about "emerging worship."
